FEAR

On the morning of my fifth AA birthday, now some time ago, I arrived at my office to be greeted by the receptionist with the message that a telegram awaited me. Upon opening it, I discovered that it was a thoughtful greeting from an old AA friend thousands of miles away in the East. The considerate impulse that motivated this gesture impressed me; however, the message inside proved to be of even more value. It said: "Fear knocked on the door, faith answered, and nothing was there. Happy Birthday." In the many, many twenty-four hour periods of continued sobriety that have elapsed since that morning I have thought often of my friend and his message, particularly about fear. Some people discredit fear as an important factor in the disease of alcoholism. Unfortunately, in the eyes of many, the word fear immediately associated images of being cowardly, yellow, scared, chicken, etc. Therefore, they tend to discredit it or attempt to ignore it. Actually, fear, in my opinion, not only has a lot to do with excessive drinking but, if understood, can be useful in recovery. Let us begin by recognizing that fear can be divided into two types: positive and negative. The positive elements of fear are healthy and it is doubtful if we could survive without them. The negative elements are sick or sickness producing. When used for positive purposes the chief goals of fear are self-preservation and preservation of those things we hold dear. Under the impetus of this emotion we build shelters or homes for ourselves and our families; we clothe ourselves and our loved ones; we engage in productive work; we interpolate ourselves into societies with laws, customs, mores. The negative elements of fear are anxiety, worry, dread, uncertainty—the whole spectrum of the emotions of insecurity, one might say. The practicing alcoholic uses the negative elements of fear as his power, rather than the positive. The result is a further sinking into the abyss of progressive, compulsive drinking. More negative fear—more drinking—more negative fear—so it goes in a chronic vicious cycle. In coming to the AA program the problem drinker learns to recognize these character defects but, more important, he is given the tools to forge the weapons to combat them and replace them. To combat them he becomes slowly familiar with a program of "spiritual progress," one of whose eventual goals is faith. Faith is the antidote for negative fear. Many years ago at an AA meeting an old-timer told me: "You can't think your way into sober living but you can live your way into sober thinking, one day at a time." This philosophy is the key to recovery and the path to faith. As the newcomer embraces AA he soon learns that there are others here just like himself and he sees that they have vanquished their primary problem one day at a time. This creates hope. If the

DO I RATIONALIZE?

What is rationalization? The dictionary says various things, such as, "to make rational or to conform to reason" or "to find (often unconsciously) an explanation or excuse for" or "to find excuses for one's desires." To put it bluntly, rationalization is the device through which we become successful in lying to ourselves. Rationalization has been discussed in our fellowship until it might be called a tired old bromide. One reason for our extensive treatment of it is that almost all of us feel that in our drinking days we were all-time champions in this particular sport. We like to talk about it. One sometimes wonders if it might not be a good idea to abandon our olden-day triumphs and reflect on how much we still indulge in this activity now that we are sober. Consider the fact that rationalization today has become what might well be called a modern art form. Everyone seems to indulge in it, in home life, in social life, and in business life. In business particularly, it has been developed to a high degree of efficiency. We make it work for us. It's a useful and productive instrument. But it is in our spiritual life that it has probably reached its highest development. We all would like to think that when we are facing a problem, or a desire, for that matter, we examine the facts and then what we believe to be right. Do we? How often do we evade the issue entirely and then find justification for our evasion? How often do we do what circumstances seem to demand, rather than that which we know is right? And when these instances arise, that unruly little voice of conscience says, "You should not have run away, you ought to go back" or "There is a difference between what you just did and what you really believe you should have done." Of course, there are countless answers to that little voice. Perhaps the classic answer is, "Well, after all I didn't make the rules of the game, I just have to live by them" or "Well, that is ordinarily true, but this case was different." Another common answer is, "Well, given a choice I might have done differently, but who had a choice?" People generally seem to think more about the impression or image they create than they do about what they really are. In the process rationalization runs rampant. It is more important to us alcoholics than any other people in the world to avoid self-deception. A wise old clergyman once said to this writer, "There is no worse sinner than the man who is convinced that he doesn't sin at all."

At times the thought has occurred to me that I have not seen "Joe" or "Jane" for some time. Usually I have dismissed those thoughts without further action other than perhaps an inquiry. But on occasion I have put forth some effort to give the person in mind a phone call or look them up and I have yet to see the time when such action has failed to result favorably. Is there someone you have been thinking about lately? Give them a call and see what happens. You just might be surprised. ☺🙌 newcomer continues to stick, sooner or later he begins to grow and a sense of trust appears. With time and continued progress, faith, like a sunrise, eventually is born. As the sun of his new faith begins to rise, the shadows and darkness of negative fears proportionally begin to fade and dim. When faith progressively replaces negative fear we begin our journey on an upward plane of sober thinking. In this state we become conscious of our God-given positive endowments. Now, healthy positive fear can take its rightful position and begin to replace any lingering negative elements that might still be about. Positive healthy fear induces good qualities that need nurturing to grow, such as caution, patience, tolerance, open-mindedness, tact and discretion. These, as they become stronger, will replace the old unwanted, discarded negative elements. We are no longer afraid of alcohol. Rather, now, we are aware of it and respect it. This awareness and this respect we try to keep salient lest we become negligent or careless—two obvious pitfalls for the alcoholic. We try to choose our paths carefully under the guidance of a Higher Power. We attend AA meetings frequently and regularly. We pursue Twelfth Step work with diligence and enthusiasm. We rely on the Tenth and Eleventh Steps as our daily maintenance. Above all else, we try to “practice these principles in all our affairs.” This is healthy. This is good. This is sane. This is a new way of life.

The Quadruple Excuse: About five years ago—it was the first year jet aircraft were in use on our commercial airlines—I was ticketed on a jet scheduled to leave Los Angeles about 1:00 am waiting for weather clearance. Then, just after take off, we had an engine flame-out. The captain assuring us there was no cause for concern, explained that we would circle for a couple of hours to lighten the fuel load. For the next eternity, while the plane trembled in what felt like an incipient stall, I applied myself to reading a book. Two and a half hours (and four pages in the book) later we set down between two crouching rows of Los Angeles fire equipment. The Captain extended us all a hearty invitation to repair to the airport restaurant and order anything we wanted to eat or drink as guests of the airline. WOW! My mind slid into high gear. 1. The drinks would be free. 2. There was no one who knew me within miles. 3. I deserved a drink because I had been scared stiff. And now the topper—4. It was 4:00 am—already tomorrow—and I had as yet made no decision not to drink that day. Suddenly the absurdity of this four-way bit of alcoholic reasoning was plain to me. I laughed. I had never before this—but have often since—thought to pray for the gift of laughter...at myself.

Once more: The alcoholic at certain times has no effective mental defense against the first drink. Except in a few rare cases, neither he nor any other human being can provide such a defense. His defense must come from a Higher Power. Big Book..page 43

WHAT THE HELL IS GOD’S WILL???

I have hear this question in many of the AA meetings that I have attended over the years and usually everyone has a different answer. I don’t claim to know the answer prior to its happening. I did recognize this when I was in Franklin, North Carolina in early July. I was at a seminar and my wife was treated badly and the food in this town was also fast, served by slow people. I needed a meeting. My wife went on the internet and found the directions to a meeting in a church basement. I tried several times to follow these directions unsuccessfully, so I stopped at a gas station for directions. After trying to write down these directions the woman just gave up and gave me a new set of directions, which I immediately forgot. I decided to go off anyway and I did find a street name which I recognized so I turned and went another block and ta ta another street I heard of and then the church popped up on my left and I turned into the parking lot. There were some people in the parking lot and I asked them if there was a meeting today. They said that a Girl Scout group was meeting instead and the meeting had been canceled. As I was driving out I saw someone who looked like a drunk going into the basement so by that time my frustration had reached a crescendo and I needed a meeting, so I parked and went into the basement where I passed the gs meeting and found an AA meeting. When they asked if anybody was from out of town and I identified myself from Tampa, the chairman asked if I brought the flag and I said not Miami and he said no cross talking. I really hate outside BS being brought up in meetings just like the tradition 10 reiterates and during my time to speak I mentioned this. I know this was God’s will that I go to this meeting after all I went through to get there. Carlton P.
